Evangelist Makes Strong Impression

Last night at the United Brethren church, Rev. Taylor, the evangelsit, delivered a powerful sermon on "Four Reasons Why we are Kept out of the Kingdom." The church was well filled and one man professed faith in Jesus Christ, making three in all since the meetings began. The music under the direction of Mr. Rush is most inspiring and in addition to the regular musical program this evening, Mrs. Joe Wheatley will sing "The Gallalleeian Call." A cordial invitation is extended the public to attend these meetings and early arrivals will get the best seats.

Boy Scouts Work For Uniforms

The Boy Scouts of this city are actively engaged in securing funds to purchase new uniforms in order that they may take part in the Fourth of July celebration. Quite a number are selling newspapers while the rag picker is donating a few pennies each day to enterprising boys who are killing two birds with one stone by cleaning up back yards and selling the iron, bones and rags.

The Suffrage association have secured a half acre of ground and plotted it out in garden beds, and gave it to the Scouts to the raising of vegetables and yellow suffrage flowers. An ice cream, cake and lemonade social is being planned by the Scouts and two stands will be located at Fourth and Sixth streets, where refreshments will be dispensed next Saturday.

One of the iron bound rules of the Scouts is to the effect that all money needed to purchase uniforms must be earned by the Scouts and no donations are allowed for this cause. A number of the boys have already secured their suits, but until the entire company is uniformed, they will not appear for public inspection.

Y. L. H. A. Dance At Eldora Tomorrow

On Thursday the Young Ladies Hebrew Association of the Monongahela valley will hold the first of a series of summer dances. Those on the committee in charge are Misses Ida Hirsch, Paula Weinberger, Sara Rosenbloom and Sophia Cowan.

Warrant Sworn Out Against Local Youth

Charles Peters of this city was arrested Tuesday morning by a warrant issued out of the office of Squire Truxal in Greensburg, charging him with running an automobile without a license. The prosecutor is James Chambers of Greensburg. Mr. Chambers alleges that while in West Newton on Decoration Day, a machine driven by young Peters ran into him, doing considerable damage. Upon inquiry Mr. Chambers says he learned that Peters was driving a car belonging to some one else, and that he was not licensed to run a machine. Peters gave bail for a hearing.

Berkey Boyd Was Here

Berkey H. Boyd of Scottdale, stopped off in town yesterday a short time on his return from Fayette City, where he was called in connection with the duties of the state health department. Mr. Boyd is an avowed candidate for county commissioner and later expects to wage his usual spirited campaign. He claims he is receiving encouragement wherever he goes and he believes his chances to get the Republican nomination are good.

Young Lad Was Before The Burgess

George Lavrenz, a twelve year old youth, was brought to the police station this morning by an elder brother who stated that the lad had been away from home since last Thursday and was incorrigible. His mother sent him down town to pay the gas bill, but he spent the money and had been sleeping out in the fields ever since, afraid to go home. This is not the first time he has been in police court, and since joining a crowd of bad boys in the Dutchtown district, he has stolen small sums of money from the house and run a grocery bill against his mother at a grocery store. The burgess after giving him a reprimand allowed him to go home, but his next visit will mean a trip to Morganza.

It was reported that a number of boys are defacing the band stand in Sixth street park and throwing stones on the roof. Burgess Dunlap notified the officers to arrest anyone caught in the act and put them in jail.

Should Grant New Trial

Speaking of Leo Frank, a skeptic says: "He has been tried by a jury of 12 men and found guilty." which is true and

"He has been tried by a jury of 100,000,000 people and acquitted," which is not true, at least it is to be hoped not.

To demand interference in Frank's case because of belief in his innocense is one thing. To demand it because of knowledge that he did not get a fair trial is quite another. The difference is as wide and deep as the Atlantic ocean. It is the difference between anarchy and justice under a form of government guaranteeing all men equality before the law.

In a republic there is hardly a more dangerous thing, especially to men without wealth and power, than interference with jury verdicts that have been arrived at in fairness and in full protection of the rights of the accused. The whole fabric of equality rots when justice, fairly and honestly secured, is beaten down. On the other hand, our whole civilization will rot when there is no strong popular protest against denial of fair trial.

Not ten thousand of our hundred millions of people are as competent to judge of the guilt of innocence of Leo Frank as is any one member of the jury. But the whole nation, including courts, high and low, that have handled the case, know that Frank did not have a fair trial. The jury was not free. No part of the legal machinery was free. To hang a man, guilty or innocent, after such a travesty of justice and equality, is lynching, and no court room walls, judicial ermine or legal forms can conceal its abhorrent features.

In behalf of the constitutional rights of men, the governor of Georgia should intervene, though he believes Frank to be as guilty as Satan himself. It is not well that all humanity should suffer lest one guilty man be not hanged.

Villa a Temperance Reformer

The arid war zone area still grows. The latest temperance reformer is Gen. Villa. He is reported to have declared total prohibition in the Mexican war zone that he controls.

The order was inspired by the failure of a military operation, due to the fact that his soldiers were drunk. Villa immediately adopted Carrie Nation tactics, sending troops into Leon, where the liquor had been obtained, and completely wrecking all the saloons, breaking the bottles and kegs and pouring their contents into the gutters. For one of Villa's soldiers to take a drink is now an offense punishable by death. Nothing seems to drive home the evils of alcohol so effectively as war. It is accepted almost universally that liquor is incompatible with effective fighting.

Temperance advocates have seen in the prohibition decrees of beliggerent governments a promise of world-wide abstinence from alcohol after the war. "Men everywhere have learned that alcohol lowers human efficiency," they argue, "and when peace comes they will seek the highest industrial efficiency by banishing alcohol for good."

Possibly they will. But it is also possible that, following the tremendous strain of war, with all human powers and emotions at their highest tension, there will come a period of relaxation characterized by alcoholic excesses and a general loosening of morals. Some observant philosophers believe that the abstaining nations will go on an awful spree when the war is over.

Law is Lacking

There ought to be a law to prevent the hiring of pleasure boats to boys of juvenile years. Many a life could be saved if such a law were on the statute books. It is a little less than criminal to permit children to take a boat and go out on a treacherous stream. While Electric park is being used as a playground, the borough officials should take some official action to prevent the hiring of boats to the youth of the town. Every precaution should be taken to keep boys away from the river, while they are allowed to assemble at the park for the purpose of recreation. The water is a temptation in the summer time and every precaution should be taken to surround that temptation with as much safety as possible. Not a year passes but what some home is made sad on account of children wandering to the water. Let the town take some action to prevent the sacrifice of these lives. It is possible to do it and we should neglect it no longer.

The mind of a child is a dangerous thing with which to experiment. Adults seldom realize what effect their words or actions may have upon a child's brain. Occasionally a child reveals, all innocently, the impression made and the theory and argument of adults is shattered. Recently a Chicago school teacher, scanning examination papers, rubbed and stifled an outburst of laughter; then grew serious. She had found an example of child mind impressions. A girl 12 years old had written the definition: "Eugenics. The science of not having babies." The definition should be studied, both by those who desire engenic teaching in the school and by those who do not.

HUNT FLOATING FORTUNE ON PACIFIC COAST LINE

Port Angeles, Wash., June 9—A floating fortune, in the form of ambergris, worth perhaps $250,000, the object of search of all the small and large crafts in this section of the Pacific coast line. The drifting ambergris was recently reported by a skipper who managed to get hold of two handfuls, worth $2,000. A heavy sea was running when the prize was found according to the story of the original discoverer, and he was able to gather it in. Ambergris is worth $40 an ounce and is used for making high grade perfume.

INDIANS PITCH CAMP AT FESTIVAL IN OREGON

Portland, Oregon, June 9—Indian chiefs and medicine men, famous old warriors of the Blackfoot tribe, which makes its home in Glacier national park, are arriving in Portland today and pitching their camp for the week. They have come to the annual Rose Festival as the guests of the city. The Blackfeet were recently taken through the Panama Canal as the guests of Louis W. Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad, and have been at the San Francisco fair. The Rose Festival promises to have the air of a circus, for the Indians will take part in the parades and celebrations and will entertain the city folks with war dances. Chief Three Bears the oldest member of the tribe and Joe Bad Marriage, a young chieftain, are in charge of the Blackfeet.

EXPRESS COMPANIES PREPARE ARGUMENTS

Washington, June 9—Oral argument by attorneys for the express companies will be heard by the Interstate Commerce Commission tomorrow, summing up their contention that they are entitled to a modification of the commissioner's rate orders which would increase their gross revenues about 3½ per cent. At the recent hearing, no direct opposition to the proposed changes was manifested, and the express companies are hopeful that their petition will be granted.

WHO PAYS? The LOVE and LIARS of EDWIN BLISS

(Copyright, 1915, by Pathe Exchange Inc. All Moving Picture Rights and all Foreign Copyrights Strictly Reserved)

IV.

Dwight looked up from the note Mrs. Pressley had just thrust into his hands, a little puzzled. He had not known before that the suicide broker had notified Selma of the embezzlement of her fortune. Still, what of it now? And why was the unusually good-natured lady in such a towering rage?

"But, my dear Mrs. Pressley, why do you give this to me?" he queried. "It merely states what you and I and all the world know—that Mrs. Dwight's fortune was embezzled. Oh, I see," he cried, a great glow on understanding coming upon him, "the note reached your hands and you kept it from Selma, fearing the shock—"

"The note, Mr. Dwight, came before you asked Mrs Dwight to marry you," the companion interrupted sharply. "You had written a trifle earlier that you intended proposing that evening. Miss Ashton told me that she intended refusing you. Then came this word from Leed—and she married you."

Dwight smiled incredulously, though grim lines had formed about the corners of his mouth.

"You — had — better — go — immediately—" He clipped off the words like steel particles. Mrs Pressley turned in her hurried retreat but there was something in those eyes that checked her.

For a long time the millionaire stood there, his arm rigidly outstretched as though he would drive from the room the evil thoughts the desperate woman had left behind. Then he laughed, laughed with an attempt at lightness. The crumpled ball of paper fell to the floor from his hand.

Slowly, slowly he reached down and picked it up, tucking it in his pocket carefully. Then he sank back in the big chair, thinking, thinking.

It was a month after the discharge of Mrs. Pressley that he stealthily moved from his chair in the library as Selma slipped out into the night air, followed shortly by Doctor Holland. He had tried to convince himself that the change in manner toward him on his wife's part was due to some intuitional reading of his thoughts. Even now he fought against the impulse which caused him to spy on the pair.

Clearly silhouetted against the night he made out her figure. Her face was covered with her hands and he could see she was sobbing silently to herself. Doctor Holland was strolling toward her, yet Dwight was aware that the physician had not seen her. He slipped quickly behind a stone pillar.

He caught the uncertainty, the surprise of the doctor as he caught sight of the woman. He caught the impulse of the man to comfort her, saw the fighting down of that impulse. Then Doctor Holland placed his hand upon her shoulder, his voice but the gentlest whisper of a sound as he called her name. She turned and looked up at him, then swiftly, some iron band of self-restraint within her snapped, and she flung her arms about his neck.

With her head resting upon his chest he murmured words which trembled back to the millionaire behind the pillar, killing something inside the very soul of the man, even as it quickened the life in his body.

Suddenly Selma drew away, crouching, fearful, as she regarded the man toward whom she had gone in her hour of weakness. Dwight leaned forward the better to listen. Her voice was broken, wild with a passionate despair as it rang in his ears.

"No—No—You must not. You must go. I will—I must be true to him while he lives. You must go—you must—"

David Dwight turned quickly and groped his way back to the house. In the hall he paused uncertainly, his hand upon the knob of the library door as though he had just come from there. Selma entered and he called softly, tenderly to her, putting his arm about her, kissing her tenderly, even as he reached out and clasped the hand of Dr Holland, who came in immediately after her.

Slowly the pair moved up the stairs and David Dwight watched them from beside the library door. He was cold now. Something had died within him. He frowned, a bit puzzled at the effort at identification. He had it—it was his soul that had been killed. That was why he had laughed inwardly as he placed his arms where those of Holland had been but a scant few moments before, as he felt the instinctive shrinking away of the woman he had married. That was why he had been so gleeful as Holland's hand returned no pressure to his own.

With a murdered soul, David Dwight found hatred had become joy.

V.

As Dwight looked about the laboratory and in the bedroom for Doctor Holland he was a bit disappointed to find the young man out.

Lately his jealous hatred had grown to such an abnormal extent that he dreaded losing sight of either of the guilty pair for one moment, lest they had fled the agony they were enduring. And today he proposed finally showing his hand, on this first anniversary of his marriage.

He had not quite decided what humiliation he would heap upon Holland. Selma's was already arranged, a humiliation that lacked nothing of refinement and dignified, courteous cruelty. He smiled as he tapped his coat pocket where a jeweler's little box lodged which was to be his present to her.

As he started to leave the room, the title, Toxicology, seemed fairly to leap from the cover of the opened book lying amid the table litter and strike him between the eyes. He picked it up curiously, turning it over in his hands, reading fragments here and there at the place where it had been opened. Then he examined the little vial with the red skull and cross-bones on its label that had rested beside the book.

A grayish shadow turned his healthy color to a dull leaden compromise of hue, as he slowly replaced the little bottle. For a moment he stood there undecided, then, with a shrug of his shoulders, turned and closed the door softly behind him.

"While he lives—I shall be true to him." That was what Selma had said that night in the garden when he had seen her abjure the love she admittedly desired. "While he lives."

Dwight resumed his library chair, pondering this new phase of the situation in his household. Yes, were he in Holland's place he would probably see to it that his rival did not live long. What had ailed the doctor that he had postponed the act this length of time?

Impatiently he looked at his watch. The time had dragged terribly, the hour before the guests arrived for the banquet, the hour immediately before which he intended unnerving his wife so the feast would be torment to her.

Slowly he rose, pausing a moment to compose his expression into the one of tender solicitude he had used as a mask for a long time now. He moved up the stairs, light as a boy, tapping softly at his wife's door and dismissing the maid with a nod. She submitted to his caresses wearily, the fresh beauty of her a trifle drooping.

He had intended speaking a few commonplaces first, but as his eyes took in the drooping corners to her mouth, the haggard lines about the eyes and realized what had put them there, he could not trust his self-control. She opened the box wearily, trying to simulate a delight at the present which she knew she could not feel. Once she looked up and caught his eyes upon her eager, cruel, gloating.

Her fingers trembled as, instead of a bit of jewelry, she found a crumpled note, opening it slowly. She did not tremble, did not cry out as again she lifted her eyes to Dwight's, after reading the letter from Charles Leed telling her that her fortune had been wiped away. Her dulled brain refused to work, her aching heart refused to regard the question of where he obtained possession of that note as of any importance.

He motioned her to pick up the card that remained in the box and she turned it over and over in her hand.

"A reminder from your husband that you lied to him and that you have only served the first year of a long sentence." She read it aloud the second time. Then her lips parroted the words slowly, as would a child learning his lesson. And gradually the threat dawned upon her and she looked hurriedly about her as though seeking some means of escape.

That note from Leed—He knew that she had married him for his money. But what else did he know, this man of superlative cruelty? Did he know of Holland?

VI.

Dwight peered over the balustrade into the dining room, then drew back, even though his eyes looked the more keenly into the place. He saw his wife touch the physician on the arm, saw her lips move, caught the nervous start of the man, then the light laugh with which he answered as he replaced a vial in his pocket.

But David Dwight laughed also. For he had seen the sinister red of the skull and cross bones—the same vial he had seen in the doctor's laboratory earlier in the day. Charmingly courteous was his manner as he received the guests already arriving.

"—and the man to whom I intrust my health and happiness will propose the first toast."

Even as their friends applauded rapturously at this tribute from the millionaire, Selma turned sharply toward him. In a flash she divined that Dwight knew everything, knew of her love for Holland quite as well as he did the reason for her marrying him. It was in his voice.

The maternal instinct within her told her the man proposed another revenge. Her eyes met his and she shrank away before the cruel glint there. He bowed gracefully for silence then extended his glass slightly as he continued.

"And as a further token of my esteem, Doctor Holland shall drink from my glass."

And then she understood, understood even as the man she loved received the wine glass from the man to whom she was bound. The instinct to cry out aloud a warning was upon her but she repressed it. She turned away with a shudder, conscious that Holland was speaking. She could not catch the words.

And suddenly she realized that she loathed this man too. Revenge—revenge—was that all man thought of, lived for, died for? The man she loved had been caught in his own trap and was merely showing himself a thoroughbred. And when he fell dead, who did they think was to pay for the scandal—who was to pay?

She half rose from her chair, even as the doctor's elbow crooked to sip at the wine. A second she remained there, then slumped heavily against the arm holding the glass, her eyes closing in feigned swoon. David Dwight's arms were about her, lifting her, carrying her to the library and placing her upon the couch. When he left the room, after turning her over to the maid, she listened to the excited chatter, the murmur of suppressed anxiety from the departing guests, lulled by her husband's soothing tones. Out of the corners of her eyes she had seen Holland heavily ascending the stairs, could feel herself listening for some sound that would tell her what he was doing.

David Dwight stood in the hallway, shaking hands with the last of the guests when she saw the doctor coming down the stairs, a suit case in his hand. She half rose upon the couch, then moved out into the room, her breath coming in a little hissing sound. She could hear the voices of the men, then, for the first time in their married life, was aware from the shrill note in the millionaire's voice that he was losing his temper. A second later came the scuffle of feet and Dwight and Holland burst into the room. At sight of her the husband regained control of himself, dropping his hold upon the younger man and laughing.

"And so you thought you would leave my house, doctor? You thought you would dodge the collector, eh? You thought you would take what you wished and then evade the payment, my young friend?"

Selma drew closer. It seemed to her she had heard the words before.

"Well, leave the house, doctor. If you wish. Leave the house and I shall brand you everywhere as the man who tried to kill his patient so he could steal his wife—or rather take the wife he already had stolen. You are at liberty to leave the house, Doctor Holland."

Suddenly the laughter died out of his voice and his face grew grim and terrible, deadly, implacable.

"Of course, you cannot leave the house. Neither of you can leave the house. I am a millionaire and I did not get those millions by leaving things undone, by permitting bills to go uncollected. I gained my money—by buying it; I gained my wife—by purchase; I bought my health."

"Health—that I bought; Life—that I bought from you, Holland Woman—of purchase—when I bought you Selma. And in my vaults you shall stay—both of you. Here in this house you shall remain with me until death by natural means comes to release you. Here in this house you shall live, both of you, and you shall look upon each other, you shall long for one another—but the jailer will be here in this debtor's prison also."

"A nun and a monk—and a jailer. An unwilling nun, an unwilling monk—and a jailer. And there shall be no whisper of that love, there shall be no caress that shows that love. For I shall be a good jailer. And you shall see to it that I live long, Doctor Holland. And you shall see to it that your husband is made comfortable, Selma. For you are paying the price."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Medicine. Send for circulars, free.

Can Hot Soup Cause Tuberculosis?

St. Louis, Mo., June 9—Whether or not the spilling of a plate of hot soup down a lady's spine would induce tuberculosis is the intricate medical question that comes up today for settlement in the Circuit court. The soup spilling is a society matter and it occurred at a social function at the aristocratic Buckingham hotel. Mrs. Grace L. Hangen of this city, wife of Dr. W. M. Hangen, was the victim of the soup incident, and she is suing the hotel owners for $25,000, claiming that she contracted tuberculosis as an indirect result of burns she suffered when a waiter spilled hot tomato bouillon down her back.

Interest in the case has been aroused through preliminary depositions take by lawyers in the case. Forty members of the Rotary club a year ago last December were called as witnesses, but the main evidence was taken by physicians. The banquet of the Rotary club a year ago last December was the scene of the soup spilling. Mrs. Hangen became hysterical when the hot soup splashed down her back. Her back and shoulders were blistered, according to witnesses, and the soup spoiled her evening gown. Others furnished testimony that the soup was hot.

SUFFRAGE RECORD FOR LAST 7 MONTHS

National Congress and Nineteen States Defeat "Cause."

5000 Socialists and 2000 Mormons Helped Suffragists Win Two States.

"In November woman suffrage was voted upon by seven states—Ohio, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Nevada. It was defeated by an average majority of over 78,000 votes per state in all except Montana and Nevada, where suffrage was established by the narrow margin of less than 8000 votes for both states.

"The population of Montana and Nevada is small and scattered over an area four times as large as Pennsylvania, but Pittsburgh alone contains 100,000 more people than both states combined. The 7386 majority given woman suffrage in these two states can be directly traced to the more than 5000 Socialist votes, and the more than 2000 Mormon votes, which a suffrage leader claims to have received 'in a solid block' for the 'cause.'"

Other states which have rejected woman suffrage since last November by the action of their legislatures are Connecticut, Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Texas, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Delaware, Michigan and Indiana. These states, with the five that defeated woman suffrage at the polls, contain over thirty millions of population, or nearly a third that of the entire country. The eleven states that have full suffrage for women, in nine of which it was granted before 1913, have a total population of nearly nine millions, or only 8.8 per cent of the total population.

The state of Illinois has partial suffrage for women, granted by its legislature in 1913. It is not expected that a constitutional amendment giving full suffrage to women of that state can be passed before 1922, and meanwhile there is a present agitation for repeal of the partial franchise.

The four 1915 campaign states, New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New Jersey, contain over twenty millions of population, and will be a serious blow to the "votes for women" movement if all are lost.

The "antis" say that if they succeed in defeating suffrage in these four states this year they will then take up the repeal of "votes for women" where it is already established.

WOMEN WITHOUT THE VOTE

Have Secured Better Measures For Benefit of Their Sex.

Pennsylvania established the first Woman's Medical College in the World.

"Pennsylvania has the best Mothers' Pension Act in the United States."—National Congress of Mothers.

"There is not one law in Taylor's whole list of Colorado measures passed by woman suffrage, that the men of Pennsylvania have not passed long ago."—Representative Frederick Beyer, in the House of Representatives.

Pennsylvania, in 1848, granted married women the right to acquire separate property, to control their own earnings; which they do not even yet possess in the suffrage states of California, Idaho and Arizona, where the wife may not acquire separate property except by gift or inheritance, her earnings after marriage merging into "community property" and liable to execution for her own or her husband's pre-nuptial debts.

Suffragettes Accused of Planting Yellow Banners on Graves of Soldiers.

Superintendent Walker, of Woodland cemetery, Philadelphia, had his share of the world's trouble on Memorial Day, when a frantic crowd of people surrounded him, asserting that the suffragettes were placing their yellow flags on the graves of soldiers. "It's desecration," chorused the crowd. The superintendent immediately gave orders to have the yellow flags removed from all graves save those of departed suffragettes.

Wyoming, where women have voted for forty five years, has no limitation of hours for women and children in industry, no industrial commission—forty-one states have such regulations—no mothers' pensions, no workmen's compensation, and no dower rights for married women.

Ida Tarbell says non-partisanship is a woman's greatest weapon. Women, writes Ida Tarbell, now stand outside of politics and therefore are free to appeal to any party in matters of education, charity or reform. Non-partisanship is their greatest weapon.

The Harbor Bar of Woman Suffrage

Then a man will clerk and men will sweep,
And the good Lord knows there will none of us sleep,
For the babes will all be moaning.

J. G. Phelps Stokes, in a speech in the Rev. John Haynes Holmes Church of the Messiah, stated that there are 6,000,000 Socialists in the world and that there would be twice as many when women voted.

Students End School Strike

Mount Pleasant High school's strike of Seniors came to an abrupt end Monday evening when a compromise was arranged between the warring school boys and girls and members of the schol board. At a special meeting of the board it was decided to permit the five members of the class who flunked to graduate on Wednesday night, take part in the commencement exercises and to receive diplomas. The diplomas, however, were to be left blank and the students who receive them in blank, will be required to take examinations at the close of the summer.

The board decided, in view of the fact that the students claimed a member of the faculty had been unjustly prejudiced against certain members of the class, to have the examinations given by a disinterested person, acceptable to the school board and students alike. After considerable discussion, members of the class decided to accept the compromise terms and the strike was declared off. This plan was recommended by the Citizens' committee, comprised of N. A. Cort, T. O. Anderson and T. S. Shaw.
